A Texas Artist

Texas Artist Files, Witte Museum, San Antonio, Texas

- 1 Texans have always had a special appreciation of art. They especially like art about Texas by Texans. One very special Texas artist was Porfirio Salinas. Salinas was a Mexican American painter who was born in Bastrop, Texas, in 1910. He grew up in San Antonio. Most of his paintings were landscapes of the state. Today, many of Salinas's paintings are treasured, collected, and displayed in museums.

Early Life

- 2 Growing up, Salinas enjoyed drawing. His teachers described him as a student whose books were rarely opened. His sketchbook, however, was never closed. Salinas was lucky because there were many artists in San Antonio. As a boy, he was able to watch these artists work around the city. This made Salinas want to pursue art as a career when he got older. One artist who greatly influenced Salinas was José Arpa. Arpa was the director of the San Antonio Art School. He would sketch around San Antonio, and Salinas often watched him.

- 3 When Salinas was a teenager, he worked in an art supply store. There he met the artist Robert W. Wood. Wood painted landscapes of Texas. However, he did not enjoy painting bluebonnets, the state flower. He hired Salinas to help paint these. Wood paid Salinas five dollars for each picture painted. Many of Salinas’s paintings are known for their bluebonnets.

An Emerging Artist

- 4 Besides watching artists and working for Robert Wood, Salinas had very little formal training as an artist. But his talent was recognized wherever he went. During World War II, Salinas was drafted into the military. Salinas was stationed in Fort Sam Houston in his hometown of San Antonio. During this time, Salinas painted murals on the walls of the officers’ lounge of the base. He also received other similar assignments that were given to him by the reception center commander. Salinas was stationed close to home so he did not have to live at the base. This meant that he could continue his canvas painting.

The Support from a President

- 5 Salinas had a steady career as an artist. In the 1940s his work started getting more notice. Texas Representative Lyndon B. Johnson loved Salinas’s work. The artist’s paintings of the Texas landscapes reminded Johnson of home. In 1961 Johnson became vice president of the United States under President John F. Kennedy. Johnson commissioned a painting from Salinas as a gift for President Kennedy. When Johnson later became president, there was no question that Salinas’s paintings would be hung in the White House.
- 6 President Johnson collected Salinas’s paintings. He also spoke about them publicly. Johnson mentioned the artist to the New York Times newspaper in 1964. Soon after, Salinas became a well-known name. The artist also became friends with the president. He often spent time at the Johnson Ranch in Texas. One of the reasons President Johnson enjoyed the paintings so much was because they reminded him of the country around his ranch. Because of President Johnson’s enthusiastic support, Salinas’s work was in high demand.

A Texas Star

- 7 Porfirio Salinas painted beautiful pictures of Texas landscapes, including paintings of bluebonnets in spring and of the Texas Hill Country. He also celebrated his heritage in scenes of rural Mexican villages and volcanoes. He was a representative of the land and spirit of Texas who also tied his Mexican American background into his work. In 1973 the city of Austin celebrated the artist because he was able to bring “the culture[s] of Mexico and Texas closer together with his paintings.”
- 8 Today, Salinas’s paintings can be found for sale in galleries around the country. His work is also hung in the governor’s mansion in Austin.

1 What is the most likely reason that the author wrote this article?

Wonders at the Winter Camp

- 1 "Good morning, Winnie," said Mom, beaming. "Do you see what I see?"
- 2 At the kitchen window, a clear December morning greeted me with a bright sky. Mom and I did a little happy dance together.
- 3 For months our family had been planning a winter camping trip. We had timed the trip to coincide with the Geminids meteor shower peak, and today was finally the day!
- 4 By noon, we were setting up our campsite. We spent a perfect afternoon hiking and exploring until hunger drew us back to camp. Dad warmed a kettle of beef stew over the fire grate.
- 5 At bedtime we dressed in thick layers and crawled into our sleeping bags. It was cozy. "I don't want to miss the meteors, Mom," I said. "Are you sure you can wake up in time?"
- 6 "Don't worry, I've set my watch alarm," she replied. "Two o'clock A.M." Tired from the fresh cold air, a hike, and the hearty stew, we all fell off to sleep quickly.
- 7 Beep, beep! Beep, beep!
- 8 Groggily I heard the sound, at first as if from a long way off, then insistently, right in my ear. Mom's alarm.
- 9 "Two o'clock, everyone," Mom said, softly. "Time to bundle up and head outside for the show!"
- 10 I heard Dad groan, but he made no move to get up.
- 11 I was so warm, and it was so dark and cold outside. I was just about to join Dad back in dreamland, when I saw Mom's face in the beam of her flashlight. She looked disappointed.
- 12 "Coming, Mom," I said as cheerfully as I could. Mom smiled. Quickly, I dressed myself in my coat, snow pants, boots, hat, and gloves.

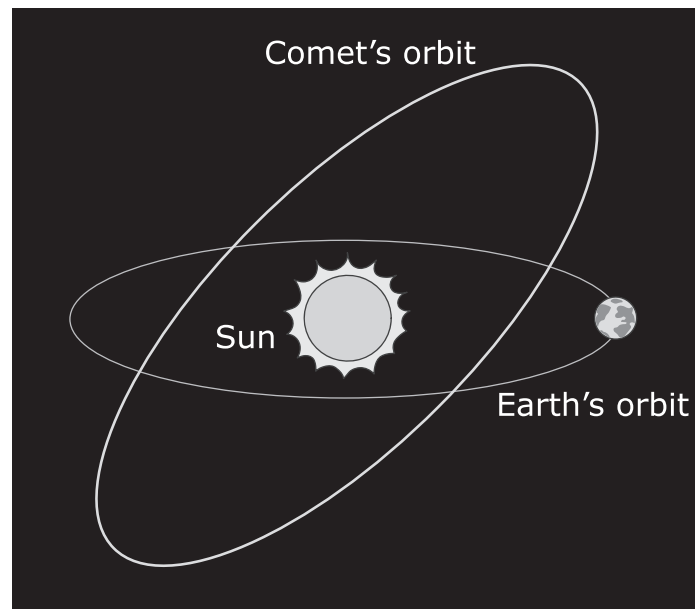

- 13 We unzipped the tent and crawled out. When we stood up and looked around, the night world was dark as ink. Above, the sky was sprinkled with twinkling stars.
- 14 We sat on a log in our clearing, and Mom turned off the flashlight. Soon, it was as if another layer of stars filled in the spaces our light had just occupied.
- 15 And then, ZIP, a streak flashed across the sky, and another, and another.
- 16 “WOW!” we said in unison. Streak after streak bombarded the sky. It was nature’s fireworks display, better than anything we could see on the Fourth of July.
- 17 “Oh my gosh, Mom!” I exclaimed. “I am so glad I did not miss this. I’ll never forget this night as long as I live!”
- 18 Mom put her arm around me and hugged me close. I hugged her back as we continued to gaze upward at the light show.

from Stardust

by Shirley Anne Ramaley

- 1 Have you ever seen a shooting star? They aren’t really stars at all. Shooting stars are meteors. They occur when a small chunk of debris burns up as it passes through the Earth’s atmosphere.
- 2 The debris is called a meteoroid. It’s a very small piece of material. In fact, most are the size of dust particles. Others might be as big as baseballs. When a meteoroid burns up in the atmosphere, it is called a meteor or shooting star. It is the flash of light we see in the night sky.
- 3 If you lie on a blanket on a dark, moonless night and look up into the sky, you might spot brief streaks of light, shooting stars. They can be seen on any night that is clear and dark. Shooting stars are easier to see away from the city’s bright lights, but you can often see them if you’re in the city too.

- 4 Most shooting stars are left over material from a comet. As comets orbit the sun, they leave a stream of debris or material behind them. Because scientists can predict when Earth will pass through the orbit of a comet, we know ahead of time when we can see meteor showers.
- 5 At certain times of the year, meteor showers occur when the Earth passes through the trail of debris left by a comet. At those times, the streaks of light are often seen every few minutes. It's quite a display in the night sky!
- 6 While most of us will see shooting stars, comets are harder to see and not as common. But there are comets you can see with the "naked eye," without binoculars or a telescope. Once a comet is visible, it will look like a bright spot in the clear sky at night. It can be seen for days and maybe weeks. Then it will fade away and might not return for thousands of years.

One Saturday

My grandparents are both really great,
But I've never stayed with them alone.
And so I'm nervous as I leave the car,
Keeping my voice a steady, even tone.

- 5 My parents told me to be good,
And I vowed to do my best:
Be good, help out, obey the rules,
And try not to get stressed.

- 10 Grandma's kiss brushed my cheek
Like the wings of a butterfly
As Mom and Dad drove away,
Waving their goodbye.

- 15 "We're going to have some fun, you know,"
My winking Grandpa said
As his giant bear-paw hand
Ruffled the hair upon my head.

- 20 A woodland hike exposed a lake
Ringed with massive trees;
The deep blue water shimmered with
The whisper of a breeze.

- 25 Back at home, Gram drafted me
To help her make our dinner,
Which, compared to mac and cheese,
Would be the proven winner.
- 25 When dark of night draped the sky,
The three of us lay down
Outside on blankets spread upon
The green grass-cushioned ground.

“Black velvet studded with bright jewels,”
30 Grandma uttered with a sigh.
“That’s the picture that I see
When gazing at night’s sky.”

The gems that sparkle in MY life,
I can touch as well as see;
35 They’re lying on their backs right now
On either side of me.

20 The most likely reason the poet includes lines 1 through 8 at the beginning of the poem is to —

- Ⓐ show the order in which events are taking place

(4) Grandma Addie has won second place three years in a row! (5) I was thrilled for this year. (6) I was excited to learn some of my grandmother's baking secrets.

(7) Grandma Addie is very particular about her recipe. (8) She wanted to show me every detail involved in making her pie. (9) Each Sunday in September, she had me ride my bike to her house, and we would practice making the pie together. (10) Our final product had to be perfect.

(11) Grandma Addie shared her original recipe with me. (12) It also uses two different types of apples, McIntosh and Honeycrisp.

(13) As she worked with me each Sunday, Grandma Addie taught me how to cut the apple slices in just the right sizes. (14) She showed me how to create dough from scratch and how to mix the filling so that the apple flavor would stand out. (15) She taught me how to cover the crust with foil to keep it from burning. (16) She showed me exactly where to place the pie in the oven. (17) She explained that this was important because it would ensure the most even baking. (18) Grandma Addie wanted to make sure I knew all the secrets to her famous pie.

(19) While each pie baked, my grandma and I drank tea or worked on a crossword puzzle together at the kitchen table. (20) Sometimes we turned on Grandma's favorite radio station, closed our eyes, and we were listening to the music. (21) As the delicious smell of the pie filled the air, we talked about other family recipes. (22) Each Sunday, I grew to admire Grandma Addie more and more. (23) Our weekend baking classes would be coming to an end soon, and the thought made me sad.

(24) On that last Sunday afternoon, Grandma Addie and I worked slowly and carefully. (25) This wasn't the day for mistakes. (26) We wanted to be sure we had followed every part of the recipe correctly. (27) In the end, our pie looked absolutely wonderful. (28) But how would it taste? (29) What would the judges think?

(30) Later that afternoon Grandma Addie and I walked nervously to the judges' table. (31) We were both thrilled to see right next to our apple pie on the table a first-place ribbon! (32) To this day, Grandma Addie insists that I was the secret ingredient she had needed all along.

Brice wrote this paper to argue for the value of recess. Read Brice's paper and look for revisions he needs to make. Then answer the questions that follow.

The Value of Recess

(1) Many elementary students say that recess is their favorite part of the school day. (2) That's because recess gives children a break from the structured learning environment. (3) They are allowed to relax, run, play, and talk to friends. (4) But some children in the United States are missing out on this break in the day. (5) Schools have been putting more focus on learning in core subjects. (6) As a result, recess time has decreased or even disappeared in some schools. (7) Recent research shows that this is not a good idea. (8) Elementary students need the break that recess provides.

(9) First of all, physical activity improves the functioning of the brain. (10) There are chemicals in the brain called growth factors. (11) These chemicals are released when children exercise. (12) They impact the health of existing brain cells and the growth of new ones.

(13) Doctors say that children need at least 60 minutes of physical activity each day. (14) Recess guarantees that kids are getting some of that activity. (15) Recess also gives kids a chance to improve their social skills. (16) On the playground they learn to share and communicate with other children. (17) They also learn to play with other children.

(18) Some people are opposed to more recess time for kids. (19) They have thoughts about student safety during recess breaks. (20) They worry that children might not be well supervised. (21) They say that some playground equipment is dangerous. (22) Others say there is not enough time for recess in the school day. (23) The time spent lining up, walking outside, and taking water breaks means less instructional time. (24) They think that students should spend school time on reading, writing, and math. (25) But research shows that kids who get to play some during the day do better in their core subjects than kids who don't.

(26) People in some states are now pushing for increased recess time for students. (27) A politician in Connecticut wants schools in her state to provide at least 50 minutes of recess each day. (28) Lawmakers in Arkansas recently passed a new law. (29) It requires a 40-minute recess break for every elementary school student. (30) A principal in Arizona has started providing two recess times for children in his school. (31) He has been very pleased with the results. (32) His teachers have observed greater focus in their students.

(33) As people learn about the value of recess breaks, more and more schools are beginning to retain or increase recess time.

(34) Experts believe that this is a good thing for kids.
